OnSpeed Launches First Ever Web Acceleration for Macintosh

OnSpeed which first launched for PC's early this year and which has witnessed an unprecedented take up of over 60,000 of UK internet users who were unhappy with their connection speeds, has today launched a major upgrade to the service and a release of a new version. The most important addition being that OnSpeed now works with Macintosh OSX (10.2 and above) as well as supporting the MAC Safari and IE browsers.

For the first time ever Internet acceleration is accessible to MAC users. Jonathan Slater, head of technology at OnSpeed states "We had over five thousand Mac users contacting us since we first launched the product 4 months ago, this clearly shows the huge demand out there." Jamie True, Marketing Director at OnSpeed adds "We are happy and truly excited to be able to announce that they no longer have to be stuck with slow connection speeds just because they prefer using a MAC over a PC."

Unlike broadband, OnSpeed is available anywhere in the world and can be set up within a matter of minutes, with no requirement to change ISP or phone company. With an annual payment of only £24.99, OnSpeed is the perfect addition to any MAC user's Internet connection.

You can buy and download the software client from www.onspeed.com
